

Abstract

A method for preparing handwritten Jewish religious scrolls, such as Torah, Megillah, Mezzuzah and Tefillin scrolls. Techniques are provided for preparing the scrolls more quickly and inexpensively than traditional handwritten scrolls while still complying with the religious requirements of the Halakha (Jewish law) and maintaining the holiness of the scrolls for religious practice. The method provides individuals and others of limited financial means with the ability to own their own scrolls, and to write scrolls for themselves, their families, their synagogues and their communities.
